

Nature Lodge Dedicated at Scout Camp

The nature lodge at Camp Geneva Kiwanis Club, was officially dedicated last night by representatives of Finger Lakes Council Boy Scouts of America and the Kiwanis Club.

The nature lodge is the center of the nature study and conservation area used by the Scouts and others at camp.

Camp Director John F. Connor Jr., introduced Scout executive Edmond T. Hesser, who gave a brief explanation as to how the Geneva Kiwanis Club became interested in the opportunity of providing a nature lodge at Camp Babcock Hovey for the boys of Finger Lakes Council.

Mr. Hesser introduced Alfred J. Freisem, past lieutenant governor of the Kiwanis Club of this area, who presented the building to the Finger Lakes Council from the Kiwanis Club.

He read the bronze plaque which stated: "Nature Lodge constructed and presented by Kiwanis Club of Geneva, 1958, to help the boy keep physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight."

Camping chairman John M. Taggart accepted the building on behalf of the Finger Lakes Council Boy Scouts of America.

Council President W. Neil Marvin concluded the program by expressing to the Scouts and friends of scouting, the appreciation that was due the multitude of people in the Finger Lakes Council area who have made the physical facilities of camping possible through their interest in the development of Camp Babcock-Hovey.

In addition to the guests present, Scouts from the following units and communities witnessed the ceremony: Troop 25, Dundee; Troop 137, Marion; Troop 30, of Canandaigua; Troop 110, Wolcott; Troop 37, Bristol Springs; Troop 63, Gorham; Troop 19, Lakemont; and Troop 82 of Dresden.

This is the concluding week of Scout camp's summer season with the largest attendance recorded at the camp in any one week. A total of 225 Scouts and staff members are participating.

What the City Thinks

Most Genevans Approve of Khrushchev's Visit

What do Genevans think of Soviet Premier Khrushchev's visit to the United States next month?

A poll of a cross section of the city of Geneva, Times reporters indicates that most think the visit is a good idea and might prove fruitful.

A few of those quizzed were doubtful and one came out against the idea entirely.

The opinions follow:
BUTCHER: "His visit is a good idea. There's a better chance of its doing more good than harm. It all depends on how it's handled. Anything is worth trying."

BARBER: "It's a good idea in my back on him, because I think

FARMER: "It's a good thing he's coming. Sometimes first wishes guide us, but if you follow the Good Book you know we want others to treat us as we would treat ourselves. Anything we can show him as to why we are as we are could perhaps be for the betterment. The better we understand each other the better off we are."

MERCHANT: "I wouldn't turn my back on him, because I think it's a good idea. If the high officials of different countries can't talk things over, how will they ever get anything straightened out?

Why made a bulldog any madder by not trying to make friends with him? Of course, if things can't be settled by talk, we'll have to take other measures, but it's better to talk things over."

PLANT OWNER: "I think it's all right. Hungarians and others have been told we live on bread and water. The more (Russians) come over here and see what it's like, the better. I think Khrushchev should be brought over here and let him see just what's going on."

GROCER: "It's my opinion that if you get him over here so he can get some first hand information, he might change his mind."

"I think he's taking an awful chance, myself. He's disliked an awful lot, and there are a lot of radicals. Another thing, when those fellows come over here and get a different viewpoint, I notice they go back there and get liquidated. However, maybe it's all a good thing."

DENTIST: "I think we're just as well off if he stayed right where he is. When we opened relationships in 1933 it didn't do any good. By opening them up again, I don't think we'll do any more good than we did at the time of the Bolshevik Revolution."

SURGEON: "I think it's a good idea. The better relations we have with these people the better. It can't do much harm."

MERCHANT: "Before Nixon's visit I was backing off a little about Khrushchev. But that visit turned out likely to be a good thing. Chances are if Khrushchev came over here and got the same welcome, it might be good."

"It's just like scraps among neighbors. Stories get started about neighbors you don't know, but once you get acquainted you find out they aren't as bad as you thought. If he gets to know the people themselves, here, it might be a good thing."

BANKER: "Frankly, I think it's a good thing. From what Nixon and others report, Khrushchev must be full of many misconceptions about this country. The only way he can get rid of them is to come over here and see the place at first hand."

PLANT WORKER: "Well, I'm a pretty good American, and an officer of the American Legion. I don't know just yet how the other boys feel, but personally, I think it's a good thing. It's for the good of all the people if we can all be more friendly. It takes two to make a fight, and two to make friends. I'm for it, because more friendship would help, and that's the way I feel after being over there in the war."

MERCHANT: "There's more to it than I can grasp. It might be of some benefit for Khrushchev to have an idea of what the U. S. looks like, and its capacity for output. But I'm afraid it might help his prestige in other countries."

"It's quite a debatable question. It was like the original idea that he see just what we are like, because many people think Khrushchev hasn't been told the true story about us. But anything to do with him is bad. He'll never change his mind. He's told us he's going to snow us under, and you can't change him no matter what you do."

"He's not coming here to do us any good. Those people have one way of doing things. That's their own, and there is no other. He has also accomplished his purpose of talking to like. Of course if he weren't brutal in his attitude, and if he is amenable to giving our position any consideration at all, it might do some good."

"But the sum and substance of my opinion is that it won't do any good."

Richards Ave. Playground —

Youngsters' Carnival Nets $110 for Charities

If you want to put on a successful carnival or ice cream social, consult the Richards Ave. playground kids. They're experts.

Their recent festival held on the playground netted the sum of $110. So the youngsters divided this amount and gave $55 to the Friendly Red Door in Geneva General Hospital; and $55 to the National Foundation to help polio victims. Parents and friends of the children flocked to the playground to view the various events and were amazed at the professional atmosphere and the techniques employed by the boys and girls.

Under the direction of their playground leaders, Kay Hamill and Ruth Brennan, the youngsters set up a realistic "carnival" with several booths, ice cream tables, hot dog stands and a variety of games.

They were shrewd enough to include a special feature for younger guests too. A docile, friendly pony was acquired for the evening and was kept busy trudging over the playground with delighted small fry on his back.

Leaders and the playground youngsters spent considerable time and effort in preliminary plans for the social, but were well rewarded with results.
