

Audit cites improper bidding

By STELLA CECERE
Improper procedures in bidding practices was one of New York State audit e period, Jan. 1, 1972 to Dec. 31, 1974.

The completed examination of town fiscal affairs has been filed with the State Comptroller in Albany with a copy at the town hall on White Springs Rd. available for public inspection.

The report is certified by Richard H. Dinolfo, senior examiner of municipal affairs, state Dept. of Audit and control, Div. of Municipal Affairs.

The following discrepancies in the administration of town fiscal affairs and practices were included in the findings:

- Competitive Bidding. No record was found to indicate that bids were requested by public advertisement, as required by law, for the installation of certain sewer lines costing in excess of $3,500.
- New Sewer Construction Project. The board should have obtained the necessary easements or lawfully prescribed rights-of-way across private property prior to construction of sewer installations. (Here the examiner pointed out that the town board authorized construction of a sewer pump station and installed necessary sewer lines on private property located within Sewer District No. 1, and subsequently, after consideration had been rendered to the property owners for use of their land, the Town acquired title to the property.)

- The West Lake Rd. Water District. Liabilities totaling $6,000 incurred in 1971 had been paid from the General Fund. (This was a criticism in a previous audit and at the time of the present examination funds had not been repaid, according to the examiner.)
- Petty cash in excess of $100 held in custody of the town clerk was not included as part of the cash balance of various town funds. (The auditor wrote that since petty cash is a cash asset, it should be included as part of the cash balance of funds from which it originated.)
- Records did not include moneys received for bid deposit on a construction contract and a payment to defray cost of a public hearing. Two checks for these payments totaling

$505 were located in safekeeping within the town hall where they had remained undeposited until April 1973 and July 1974. (Money should be deposited when received was the examiner's recommendation.)

Additional findings in the state examination were that customers in Water District No. 1 (Lenox Park) were being charged less than the rates established by the town board. The differences, the report said, resulted from errors in computation of charges based on consumption. (The situation was corrected, according to the auditor, after it was brought to the attention of town personnel.)

The Town Clerk was criticized for not maintaining a control account for water and sewer billings and the recommendation was that such records and individual unpaid accounts be reviewed and reconciled periodically.

The board as a whole was taken to task for not auditing paid capital project claims as required by Town Law. In addition, the filing of claims by the Town Clerk, according to the examiner, did not follow the statutory directives that each claim for audit be numbered consecutively.

Senior Examiner Dinolfo noted that the establishment of the town's new sewer district was undertaken during the period examined. There was financial assistance for the project from the U. S. Dept. of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) and the state Dept. of Environmental Conservation (DEC). The examiner wrote that, "Our examination of records pertaining to flood control and sewer construction did not include a review of the items claimed for state federal aid. This phase of the examination is subject to audit by other state and/or federal agencies."

The study for that period showed the town's population at 2,781 (1970 census); also, that there were four special water districts; two special lighting districts; a fire protection district; and a new sewer district.

A summary of cash transactions for the year ending Dec. 31, 1974 listed the following figures: balance beginning of fiscal year, $969,058.20; receipts, $1,041,951.42; disbursements, $1,117,802.71; and balance at end of fiscal year, $893,206.91.

Walsh asks resignation of agriculture secretary

Rep. William F. Walsh (R-33) said today that Earl Butz, Secretary of Agriculture, should resign and the entire department should be reorganized.

"The department is riddled with indecision, contradictory policies, and a near-total lack of leadership and should be completely overhauled, starting at the top," Walsh said.

Walsh criticized the department's role in grain sales to foreign nations. "Mr. Butz' request this week for a slowdown in grain trading with the Soviet Union is too late to have any effect on the spiraling cost of food," Walsh said. "When the deal with the Russians was first announced last month, all indications pointed to Butz and his department being the last ones who knew what was going on. The first result was an immediate 25 per cent domestic price increase in the cost of wheat, driving up the costs of bread.

"Now, while prices are going up, the department learns we may not have a bumper crop after all, and exports are being cut back. At the very same time, we then announce a new deal for grain exports to Japan, indicating again that there is a surplus.

"This is totally contradictory, and it is no wonder grain dealers are getting rich while the rest of the agricultural community, especially Northeast Dairy farmers, are getting fed up with Butz' blunders," Walsh said.

"I don't know of a single dairy farmer or a single consumer who is satisfied with the way things are going," Walsh said. "I think everyone concerned would welcome a new secretary and an overhauled department that's more in touch with what's happening at home."

Supervisor: procedures being corrected

By STELLA CECERE
Responding to the state audit of Town of Geneva fiscal affairs, Supervisor Arthur Rundell told The Times that corrective measures wherever possible and as recommended by the state examiner are already in order.

Rundell noted that Senior Examiner Richard Dinolfo, state Dept. of Audit and Control, spent a good portion of a nine-week period in the spring of this year going over the town's accounts.

"In that length of time he was given complete access to our records and Town Clerk Mabel Ansley and I cooperated with Mr. Dinolfo however we could."

The annual financial operation of the town runs approximately $2 1/4 million. "We're talking big business here," said Rundell, adding it was his feeling that when the state examiner left he was satisfied that "the books of the town fairly represent town business."

Geneva Town supervisor offered the following explanations in response to various criticisms contained in the examiner's account:

Where it was indicated, on the item of competitive bidding practices, that the town did not advertise for bids for work in excess of $3,500, Rundell said there were two instances occurring during the new construction project where work was being done by the same contractor — Ontario Pipeline of Victor — on private property. The town's obligation, according to Rundell, was to ring the sewer line to the property line of a privately-owned industrial park located on Rt. 14.

He explained, "We (the town) had been substantially completed on the project by Ontario Pipeline when it was discovered we had to run an additional line to the property. By allowing them to do the portion of work which was the town responsibility, we were able to secure a better price than by issuing a change order."

The supervisor's response on the criticism that there was no easement when the town proceeded to construct a pump station on private land (Geneva Country Club.) was that "at the time a tentative agreement between the town and club had been reached prior to construction... although the town did not possess the actual deed." Rundell said that presumably later the town exchanged a $4,400 lateral plus payment of one dollar for a quit claim deed to approximately 30,000 sq. ft. of Country Club land, housing the pump station.

Moneys borrowed from the General Fund to pay West Lake Rd. Water District debts was explained this way by the supervisor.

"The loan," he said, "was made to the district in lieu of borrowing." Funds will be repaid to the General Fund "on settlement of a pending West Lake Rd. water suit" against several firms to recover damages from an alleged faulty water line. On bid deposits and petition receipts which were retained in the safe over a period of time, Rundell said that one check, which was for $50, was on a request for housing variance. "This has since been returned." The other instance was a certified check for $455, which represents retainage by one contractor on the new town garage project. "We still have it as retainage but once the contract is approved, it will be returned."

On other criticisms contained in the report, Rundell said that the various town officials were taking the necessary steps to follow recommendations as outlined.

The state examiner conducted an exit interview July 11 with members of the board. Rundell said at that time, "he (Dinolfo) acknowledged he found no discrepancies in an audit of books of the two town justices. This is commendable, the supervisor said.

In addition to the supervisor and Town Clerk Mabel Ansley, members of the Town of Geneva Town Board include Justice George Moore, Justice C. Charles Cooley, Councilman Thomas Gibbons and Councilman Claude Thorpe.

Others who were in office for a period of time covered by the audit were: John Choffin, councilman, 1-1-72 to 2-1-74; and Fred Mann, town clerk, 1-1-72 to 12-31-73.

Youngsters await Camp

By DAVE RICKEY
Irving Abelow has never seen Camp Onseyawa, but he will be a part of about 140 handicapped youngsters' fun there for the next two weeks.

The Palm Springs, Fla. resident is presumed to be the oldest living muscular dystrophy patient in the world, says Genevan Don Bogart, director of the camp. Every year Abelow donates camp tee shirts, awards, and jackets to two-year camp veterans.

Camp Onseyawa, which draws its name from the first two letters of each of four counties — Ontario, Seneca, Yates and Wayne — starts Sunday afternoon and runs through Aug. 29, Bogart says.

Abelow never had a chance to visit the camp, which annually runs for the last two weeks of August at Camp Babcock Hovey, property of the Boy Scouts.

While in the area, Abelow was a patient at Clifton Springs Hospital, and became good friends with Dr. Robert Wood, who himself is active in the camp program.

The program has almost tripled in size since its founding in the mid 1950s, says Bogart. Twenty-three Rotary Clubs in the four counties sponsor the camp.

Yesterday, over 60 members from several Rotary clubs visited the campgrounds near Willard State Hospital, to set up tents and bring in equipment and supplies. Today and Saturday, other members will continue readying the camp.

The grounds should be ready by Sunday, when about 140 children 9-17 from throughout the four counties will arrive.

At the camp, the children will be supervised by a staff of about 75, Bogart estimated. Sunday night the staff will put on a talent show for the children.

The children themselves will get to test their own talent during the two-week campout. Various awards will be given to all children, Bogart guarantees, and "one of the biggest" events will be a fishing contest on Seneca Lake for all the campers.

When they're not trying to catch trout, the children may find themselves firing a .22-caliber rifle under a certified rifle instructor, Bogart says.

The children can learn to shoot arrows through an archery program, Bogart notes. Getting away from the field, children can take part in programs of ceramics, handicrafts, cooking, sewing or photography, to name a few.

Though the children may not leave camp as photography buffs or checker kings, they will probably know how to swim, according to Bogart. He says the children all must take part in swimming instruction.

The camp is divided into living units, each housing about 12 kids (two to a tent) and at least four counselors, Bogart says.

The counselors, as well as the rest of the staff, is paid for their work, Bogart says. He himself is a psychologist for BOCES who spends the latter part of August running the camp.

Helping Bogart is Bob Gleason, who is program director. Assisting Gleason is Jim Blankenberg of Palmyra.

Joseph Baldwin of Oneonta is in charge of male counselors, while Jean Franchi of Newark is the senior girls' counselor.

The staff, along with the handicapped children, are selected for the camp during the late school months.
