

Old trees don't always die

Sometimes they just fall down. Recent summer storms have felled two mighty trees in Clyde in widely separated areas. An elm tree fell on the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Kinnetz on Reese St. (picture on left) and a soft maple tree fell on the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dale Reed on Cayuga St. No one

Workshop produces complaints

By ANNE MALOY
CLYDE-SAVANNAH — Although the group sessions on school objectives were said to be "worthwhile and a good start," complaints were made also that no solutions have been offered for the objections raised, that the same ideas have been discussed over and over, and that there is too much technical wording used. There were 43 parents, teachers, students, administrators and other community residents at the July 28 pilot workshop at the central school here.

The most recent in a series of sessions begun last fall was planned and conducted by faculty members attending a "summer institute" dealing with "school redesign" which presumably has to do with what goes on inside the school and not the design of the buildings. These teachers are James Darnell, Tony Giovannini, Kathy Malone, Vicki Jablonski, Emily Cahoon, Maureen Jackson, Nancy Colvin, Martha McDaniell, and Bonnie Kenyon.

The July 28 workshop started with a game called "Lost on the Moon" intended to show the value of group participation as compared to "going it alone." The game was followed by group discussion of two questions, with the session ending on a question and answer period and summation.

Questions analyzed were "what were your feelings about last year's workshops and what were the purposes of them." These topics brought out that the purposes were to unite the school and community in establishing goals, rules and guides, and to aim for a student-centered school not dominated by an autocratic system.

Other worthwhile results of the past meetings were described as giving the students a chance to have their viewpoints heard and recognized; maintaining a good balance of students, parents, teachers and other members of the community; creating an opportunity for participants to rap with one another; and establishing a feeling of sharing the role of making the school more effective.

On the other hand, results of the meetings were not all sweetness and light. Other objections raised were that participants digressed from the topic being discussed; a lack of understanding existed as to the purpose of the workshops; in some instances, some instructors offered little guidance, failed to acknowledge views of students, dominated the discussions, and did not adhere to guidelines set up for the workshops; too much was expected to be accomplished; and better organization and orientation were needed.

Suggestions for more concrete and useful results from future workshops were as follows: observable results in the classroom; publicity and feedback on workshops; specific ways to carry out the recommendations made; large attendance by both parents and students; separate student meetings; and a list of state mandates.

Recommendations for the conduct of education in the Clyde-Savannah school dealt extensively with courses, the roles of student and teacher, and extra-curricular activities. Among the 17 suggestions for improving the educational experience were: more relevant courses; more electives and flexibility in choosing subjects; specialized courses in such areas as home economics and industrial arts on a one semester basis; instruction in student problems, social relationships, family training at the elementary level and continuing into adult education; continuity between junior and senior high; a moderate pace throughout the year instead of rushing at the end of the year to meet the state requirements.

Other recommendations included more individualized instruction; more hobby clubs and summer recreation; wider spread of interest with respect to the total sports program; flexibility in study halls; more access to teachers; more concern, understanding and trust of students by teachers; avoidance of labeling of students; more interesting presentation of courses and more student participation in classroom; and homework "with a purpose."

Conclusions drawn from the workshop were that future meetings should determine which recommendations should demand immediate action. Involved participants expressed a wish to take part in future sessions and emphasized that increased community participation is important.

Boy Scout camp rated highly by committee

The Finger Lakes Council Boy Scout Camp, Camp Babcock-Hovey, received one of the highest ratings of any Scout camp in western New York at the recent inspection by the National Camping Committee.

Camp Babcock-Hovey received 116 out of a possible 120 points on its inspection. The camp has always been noted for its outstanding program, and was again commended for its exceptional program for the Scouts.

Burton August of Rochester, a member of the National Camping Committee, and James A. Earley, deputy regional executive, were the members of the inspection team. Representing the Finger Lakes Council were Carl Fribolin of Geneva, Council president; Fred Reynolds of Geneva, camping chairman; Henry Smith of Phelps, Health & Safety chairman; Ron Fannon of Victor, district camping committee; Stan Waters of Lyons, camp director, and John Bolte of Geneva, Scout executive of the Council.

The inspection was interrupted for five minutes for a memorial silence in memory of Rusty Pedersen of Waterloo, a Star Scout in Troop 81 of Waterloo, who was killed in a boating accident on Seneca Lake. Rusty had been in camp the week prior to his death, and was well known by many of the staff.

Particular recognition was given to Stan Waters, the camp director, Tyler Morris, the business manager, and Dick Becker, the camp ranger for their part in making the fine showing in the inspection by Mr. Earley and Mr. August.

Camp Babcock-Hovey provides a summer camping experience for about one thousand Scouts of the four county area of Ontario, Seneca, Yates and Wayne counties, and a camping experience to about 120 non-scouts, foster home children, and welfare children at no expense to the children.

The Council also provides the Camp and all its equipment to the Rotary Clubs of the four county area for their Handicapped Childrens Camp free of charge, and has done this for the past several years.

Special window designed for Sauerkraut Festival

By MARGI LASH

PHELPS — Mrs. Richard Rathbun and Mrs. Mary Preston of the Phelps Historical Society have designed a special window in the Main St. store, adjacent to the bank, in honor of the 5th annual Sauerkraut Festival.

Using items either on loan or given to the Historical Society, the ladies have concentrated their display around items which were made in Phelps or were directly concerned with people's lives who lived here.

Stepping in front of the window is like stepping into the last century where the viewer is confronted with such memorabilia as china dolls, a baby's christening outfit, flat irons, Dr. Pritchard's old medical kit loaned by Mrs. Osborne Willson.

Of special interest is a large paper bag from the Star Willing Mill, which used to be located on the Outlet, loaned by Mrs. Daniel Decker, the granddaughter of the mill owner. A jug from the Garlock Cider Mill entices one to look further to the outstanding collection of memories from the Old Vienna School which was the forerunner of the Phelps Union and Classical School, loaned by Oliver Crothers.

The display will be available until Monday and is the second such display during Sauerkraut Festival time. Last year's window included the history of the making of sauerkraut using photographs, histories and utensils loaned to the Historical Society.

Instructor attends 6-day tractor meet

WILLIAMSON — James Harding, teacher of Agricultural Mechanics at the Wayne County Occupational Center, attended the Allis Chalmers School of Hydraulics and Power Transmissions at the Armory in Columbus, Ohio, July 12 to 17. Harding was part of a group of about 35 students from the eastern seaboard and Middle Atlantic States.

He reported that daily classwork amounted to eight or nine hours of both theory and practical demonstrations. The class members practices on the new AC 180, 180 XT, and 190 tractors and glenier combines.

The six-day workshop covered assembly and disassembly, basic principles of hydraulics, pumps, glenier and tractor valves, clutches and power take-off, cylinders, and trouble-shooting the hydraulic system with hydraulic testing equipment.
